

Traceable regressions: concepts and a prospective study of child development

Nanny Wermuth, Chalmers Technical University, Gothenburg, Sweden and International Agency of Research on Cancer, Lyon, France

A flexible subclass of graphical Markov models are traceable regressions. These are sequences of joint response, conditional distributions for which regression graphs permit one to trace pathways of dependence. These methods are used to analyze and interpret data from a prospective study of child development, now known as the 'Mannheim Study of Children at Risk'.